Supporting young people

Priory is the leading provider of mental health and behavioural care services in the UK, supporting thousands of people each year including young people facing mental health challenges.

The mental wellbeing of a child is just as important as their physical health. Often young people who suffer from mental health issues, such as depression and anxiety, don't get the early specialist support they need.

Along with the day-to-day struggles they bring, they can prevent children from achieving their best in school or college and also affect families, friends and loved ones.

We understand that in order to support young people, they need access to the highest quality of care, tailored to their individual needs. Priory hospitals and wellbeing centres offer access to private mental health treatment for young people.

Understanding mental health in young people

There are huge pressures on young people in modern life, including:

- + Bullying, including cyber bullying
- + Exam stress
- + Peer pressure
- + Social media burdens
- + Body image
- + Family breakdown

Young people may secretly struggle emotionally, and engage in unhealthy behaviours as a result. Along with the everyday struggles mental health difficulties can bring, they can also prevent young people from achieving their best in school or college.

It is important to remember though that they don't have to cope alone and children and teenagers can often find discussing issues with a clinician much easier than discussing them with a parent.

What do we treat?

Early intervention is key to reducing the likelihood of a condition developing into something more serious. The range of treatments Priory offers can help a young person get back on track as quickly as possible.

Case study - mild anxiety

Amy* had always been slightly anxious and timid but recently she has become very upset if she has had to speak in front of the class. Amy has always tried to convince her parents she is too unwell to go to school.

Amy also struggles to go to a counter in shops to pay for items and is embarrassed to order her own food in restaurants. She had a school trip coming up and struggled to get to sleep the night before as she was worrying how she would manage two nights away from her parents. Amy was thinking she would miss them too much and that teachers would not be able to look after her properly if she is worrying.

Apart from the above issues, Amy functions really well. She is happy and doing well at school. Her parents were unsure if they should take her for an appointment. The GP had been clear with them that she would not meet the threshold to be seen by CAMHS (the NHS mental health service for children). They had a friend whose daughter had been seen at the wellbeing centre for treatment of a phobia and they had heard positive information from them about their experience, so they attended for an assessment.

During the initial psychiatric assessment Amy received, the psychiatrist explained to them in detail the thinking errors their daughter was experiencing. She also explained the role of adrenaline in her anxiety.

They found this explanation alone really helpful. Amy did not need medication or further psychiatric review but she did have six sessions of cognitive behavioural therapy (CBT) on a weekly basis. This CBT dealt with her anxiety and taught her lots of helpful coping strategies. Amy went on the school trip and enjoyed it.
