

Daniel's story

New Stead House case study

Daniel* came to live at New Stead House in Redcar to be located closer to his family. Daniel is autistic, and has type 1 diabetes. Unlike his previous residential accommodation, New Stead House was able to provide a clear pathway for Daniel through the service, into supported living within the community.

How we have supported Daniel

When Daniel arrived at New Stead House, he had a high level of anxiety, which led to presenting behaviours that were of concern to his support team. Through one-to-one support from staff and detailed support plans put in place, Daniel became more settled at the service and less agitated. These plans included positive behaviour support and an activities plan, which helped Daniel develop his social interaction skills and become more independent in the community.

Daniel enjoys a wide range of planned daily activities such as meals out, playing snooker and football, as well as going for Sunday lunch with his Dad on a weekly basis. Daniel even attends a local charity project in Redcar once a week, where he makes woodwork for our gardens.

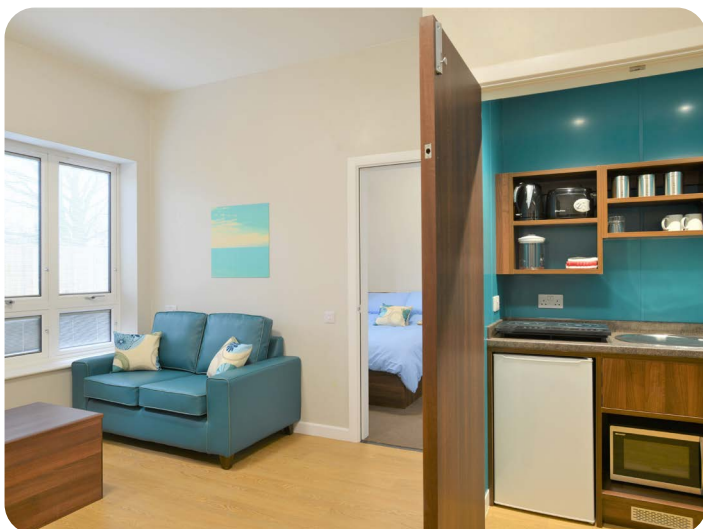

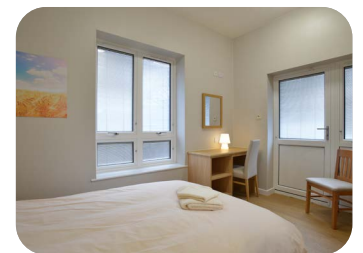

Supported by the staff team, Daniel lives in his own flat at New Stead House, which helps him to further develop his independence skills and prepare for the next steps in his pathway, to live in the community. The accommodation within the flat includes a bedroom, a lounge area, with its own activities of daily living (ADL) kitchen, and a garden. Daniel prepares and cooks his own food, as well as maintains the flat on a regular basis.

Achieving positive outcomes

Since living at New Stead House, our positive and supportive approach towards Daniel has helped to meet his needs without resorting to concerning behaviours, build his confidence and daily living skills.

Daniel is now ready to live in the community and is currently looking to move into his own independent flat in Redcar. As part of the services provided at New Stead House, the staff team will continue to support Daniel once he has successfully moved into his own tenancy.
